No Objection Certificate Request from Student to Institution

WHAT IS AN NOC AND WHY DO YOU NEED IT?

Many law firms and chambers — especially top-tier ones — require a No Objection Certificate (NOC) from your law school before confirming an internship. The NOC is issued by the institution on its letterhead, stating that the college has no objection to the student undertaking the internship during the specified period. Without it, some firms will not issue an offer letter. Apply for your NOC at least 2 weeks before your internship start date.

Variant A — Formal Application Letter (to Dean / Placement Cell / Principal)

TIPS FROM LOCUS BY LEXROOT

- Apply for your NOC at least 2 weeks before your internship start date. Some placement cells and offices are slow to process requests, especially near exam periods.
- Always attach the firm's offer letter or confirmation email — it makes the request credible and speeds up processing.
- If your institution has a standard NOC form, fill it before submitting this letter. Attach the filled form along with this application.
- If the internship period overlaps with classes or practicals, proactively mention how you will manage attendance — this removes the college's main concern.
- Keep a copy of the issued NOC. Most firms will ask for it by email — scan and send a clear PDF copy.
- If your college refuses to issue an NOC, ask for a letter on plain paper from the Placement Cell or faculty advisor acknowledging your internship — some firms accept this as an alternative.
